

The National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) should concern themselves with why so many people have abandoned broadcast radio for satellite radio instead of attacking services like XM needlessly. Endless commercials and extremely limited variety in programming are what drove me away from being a slave to what someone else thought I should hear. Regarding the issue of 'locally oriented' content - will there soon be a limit to what news I can hear also? When all of America converts to satellite radio and television, everyone will be much happier and wonder why they waited so long to break free.
